REVENCE OF A FAT WOMAN.

Paid a Rude Theater Companion Back in a Smart Way. Apropos of the theater, I saw some thing one other night within the last seven that filled me with a totally un holy glee, says a Washington Post writer. A woman sat in front of me She was decidedly plump-in fact, she ing destroyed in vast numbers by the was what Illinois people call cornfed. She was bare-headed, too, by the way, the lakes and pools where they harbor, and before the play began and after every act she had to stand up and let a Thousands of these eggs are annually man who sat near her pass out. It was a tight squeeze every time, and as the than by the numbers actually shot, they man did not say "Pardon me," "Beg have been greatly diminished. This con leave," or anything else to show the feith that was in him, I could see the tide of that fat woman's wrath rise till | treaty with a foriegn power, and the its crimson edge made the straggling fringe below her back hair bristle indignantly. At last the play was over, and the man wanted to rush out to join two women friends-undoubtedly he'd have called them "lady friends"—whom he had noticed near. But did he rush? Well, if he did, his rush wasn't visible o the naked eye. That fat woman sat down and put on her rubbers. Then she replaced her gloves, which she had taken off. Then she stood up, blocking the passage, while she put on her hat, adjusted her veil and buttoned her cloak. And all the while the man was dancing with impatience, unable to get out, and the two "lady friends" were passing out the door. At last the fat woman moved, and the man-well, inasmuch as nothing so much angers a man as a punshment he knows he deserves, you can imagine how he looked. For my part, I thought it was delightful, and if I ever Plants! meet that fat woman I mean to tell her
